LONDON: An Iranian women who broke Iran's strict hijab laws while competing at a climbing event in South Korea was forced to publicly apologize over the incident, the BBC reported.

In a statement this week after taking part in the competition without a headscarf, 33-year-old Elnaz Rekabi said her hijab had "fallen off inadvertently."

But a source told the BBC that Rekabi's family had been threatened by Iranian authorities after footage of the climber at the event went viral online.
