

Green Party responds to conclusion of COP29

Reacting to the conclusion of COP29, Green Party co-leader Adrian Ramsay MP said:

“This COP has tested the patience of everyone who wants to see the devastating climate crisis tackled.

“The final agreement is simply not good enough for the world’s poorest nations with too little money to deal with devastating impact of climate change, and the oil and gas lobby has succeeded in weakening the commitment made at the last COP to ‘transition away’ from fossil fuels.

“Yet, COP is still the one international forum in which those who are today bearing the major, immediate burdens of the human-made climate catastrophe become visible and heard.

“It is the one forum that offers the chance to bring nations together to act and move away from the fossil fuel economies that are destroying our planet and making life intolerable for millions in the global South.

“That is worth protecting and building on.

“We are half-way through a critical decade for action, and the devastation wrought through more floods, drought and wildfires is now obvious.

“The moral and scientific case for doing everything possible to meet the demands of the Paris climate agreement becomes stronger as the damage caused by every 0.1 degree rise becomes ever clearer.

“Now is the time for action. That means turning the limited financial pledges agreed at COP, which already fall far below the demands of the global South, into hard cash.

“That money – in the form of grants, not loans – needs to be available right now for adaptation and mitigation, alongside funding to cover the loss and damage already experienced by the poorest countries.

“The climate finance to fund the transition to a global green economy only makes sense if we move away from fossil fuels. Here, that means the Labour government ruling out the Rosebank development in the North Sea.

“Prime Minister Keir Starmer has shown commitment to the COP process by being one of the few leaders of richer countries to attend.

“Now, he needs to build on that foundation and take an international lead in defending the gains made through previous COPs in the face of what will be a relentless attack by fossil fuel companies backed by a climate denier in the White House from January next year.

“He must also take seriously the need to make the UK more resilient to changes in the climate that are already affecting us here.

“Climate action today is about creating a world tomorrow in which can meet people’s basic needs and enable people and nature to thrive.

“The UK government should back the call from international leaders (1) for a reformed COP process in which the powerful fossil fuel lobby is excluded.

“The fossil fuel lobby has the self-interest to block the immediate action the people and planet need. They cannot be allowed to succeed.

“COP must become the forum that holds governments to account and pushes forward change, including supporting countries to adapt to the impacts of the crisis already being felt.

“A COP that excludes the fossil fuel companies and their lobbying arms while supporting representatives of countries and indigenous peoples most impacted by climate change can transform all our futures.”

Reacting to the latest Ofgem price cap announcement, Green Party co-leader Adrian Ramsay MP said:

“This is miserable news for those already struggling to make ends meet in the run up to Christmas and follows a 10 per cent rise in August.

“The government’s own figures show that its unnecessary decision to end universal winter fuel payments to help with bills will plunge 50,000 more pensioners into poverty next year.

“The government must act. It says that its promised GB Energy will see prices fall – but when? It should support people to use less energy – and cut their bills – now. It should fund a national programme of council-delivered home insulation starting immediately.

“Insulating people’s homes means they can stay warm while using less energy, save money and produce fewer harmful carbon emissions.”

Warm homes announcement “left too many householders out in the cold” say Greens

2. Press Releases

Responding to the Department for Energy Security and Net Zero’s announcement that up to 300,000 homes will benefit from upgrades next year, Green Party Co-Leader Adrian Ramsay said,

“Today’s announcement left too many householders out in the cold. Household heating accounts for almost a fifth of the UK’s greenhouse gas emissions. And while making up to 300,000 homes a year warmer and cheaper to run is welcome, it falls far short of the 15 million homes that the UK Green Building Council says need to be retrofitted by the end of this decade.”

“Heat pumps are a proven technology, but their uptake has been slowed by a lack of consistent support for households and industry, combined with underinvestment in creating the workforce and supply chains needed. What we need now is a nationwide programme of government-backed, council-delivered home insulation and clean heat sources installation starting immediately to keep people’s homes warm, bring down their bills, and reduce emissions.”

Arrest warrants make clear selling arms to Israel 'abets war crimes'

2. Press Releases

Carla Denyer, co-leader of the Green Party said:

"The ICC arrest warrants for Benjamin Netanyahu, Yoav Gallant and Mohammed Deif shows that to continue selling arms to Israel is to aid and abet war crimes. It is utterly indefensible.

"The Government must recognise that their approach to the war in Gaza has failed. They must consider far more direct measures to incentivise a ceasefire including an end to arms sales, the introduction of divestments, boycotts and sanctions, prosecutions for all those who have committed war crimes and a plan for a viable Palestinian state."

Greens welcome £1bn in funding for buses but challenge scrapping £2 fare cap and call for bus priority measures

2. Press Releases

Responding to £1bn in funding which the government says will deliver a London-style bus service across England [1], co-leader of the Green Party, Carla Denyer MP, said:

"It is encouraging to hear that councils will be empowered to take control of bus services. Tory deregulation of services was a green light for axing routes, running down services and a focus only on those routes which generated a profit.

"It is also right that funding be based on need. However, the idea that Labour's £1bn will mean a London style bus service arriving to all corners of the country is questionable.

"Also, increasing the single bus fare by 50% while freezing fuel duty definitely wasn't the ticket. Keeping the £2 bus fare cap in England would have cost just a tenth of the money the government squandered by freezing fuel duty [2]. And too often bus reliability is affected by traffic, so we will need some bold moves on bus priority so buses can actually turn up when they are meant to."
