

Notice: TS23 4HA, Marlow Foods Limited: environmental permit partial surrender issued

The Environment Agency publish surrenders that they issue under the Industrial Emissions Directive (IED).

This decision includes the partial surrender notice, decision document and site condition report evaluation template for:

- Operator name: Marlow Foods Limited
  - Installation name: Belasis Site
  - Permit number: EPR/BW9247IK/S008
-

Notice: DL2 2PB, Ringway Infrastructure Services Limited: environmental issued

The Environment Agency publish permits that they issue under the Industrial Emissions Directive (IED).

This decision includes the permit and decision document for:

- Operator name: Ringway Infrastructure Services Limited
  - Installation name: Dalton Depot
  - Permit number: EPR/AP3330JQ/A001
-

News story: 30 hours childcare offer helping balance work and family lives

Thousands of parents taking advantage of the government's 30 hours free childcare offer have been able to take on more hours of work, new research published by the Department for Education today shows (11 September).

The research, published one year on from the launch of the 30 hours childcare scheme, show that working parents and their children are reaping the benefits of better access to formal early education.

It shows that the vast majority of parents (86%) said their children were better prepared to start school ready to learn, due to spending time in government-funded childcare places.

The survey also showed that more than three-quarters (78%) of parents taking up the free 30 hours offer for their three and four-year-olds, reported having saved money, which they were able to invest back into their families and improve their overall quality of life.

Children and Families Minister Nadhim Zahawi said:

Every parent wants to give their child the best start in life and that's why it's great to see that the research published today confirms the story I hear so often from parents during my visits up and down the country.

More parents are increasing their working hours, able to work more flexibly, and spending less on childcare so they have spare cash to spend on their families.

Working families of every kind are reaping the benefits, including single mums and parents from lower-income backgrounds, who all told us their children's development had come on leaps and bounds by spending time in free childcare.

In its first year, more than 340,000 three and four-year-olds have benefited from a 30 hours place. Providers have stepped up to the plate to deliver the offer which is having a significant positive impact on families' lives.

Over 3,000 parents were surveyed about their experiences of using the government-funded hours, including whether the offer saved them money and improved their children's development, with families from lower-income backgrounds most likely to say that the hours had made their children more 'school ready'.

Other findings from the research published today showed that the 30 hours offer:

- Improves finances: 69% of parents using the 30 hours offer said their weekly childcare bills have fallen, while 84% said the 30 hours is making a difference to their family finances.
- Helps increase working hours: 71% of parents said 30 hours helps them balance work with their childcare needs (46% of whom said it was made a 'great deal' of difference), and more than two in five parents (42%) said it gave them more flexibility over their working hours.

- Supports lower-income families: Parents from lower or middle income households were more likely to say that 30 hours makes a 'great deal' of difference to their ability to balance family life with work.
- Can be tailored to a family's needs: 71% of parents using the offer found it flexible to use, fitting it around their lifestyles
- Improves access to childcare: It also showed that 83% of three and four year olds are now able to take advantage of some form of free childcare offer from the government. In June, the Department for Education published census data, which showed 94% of children were benefiting from funded early education from the Government.

The research also looked at the experiences of childcare providers delivering the 30 hours offer, with over 75% reporting they were offering the entitlement, and the majority (74%) saying that they had not been forced to impose extra charges on parents.

The survey results follow recent data from the Office for National Statistics which showed the number of children living in workless households has dropped to 14.3% in the last year. There are now over 637,000 fewer children living in workless households than there were in 2010 and nearly one million fewer workless households overall. The employment figures showed the number of working households continues to rise and real wages are rising.

This builds on the announcement at the weekend (Saturday 8 September) from the Education Secretary Damian Hinds on a £30million fund to create more high quality school based nurseries in some of the most deprived areas of the country. The Department for Education also published research which showed a boost in the early social and emotional skills of two to four year olds that attend formal childcare, including nurseries, pre-schools and childminders. These are some of the essential skills children need in order to arrive at school in order to thrive, and demonstrates the benefits of early years education on children's early development.

The Education Secretary also announced additional support for parents to access the government's free childcare offers through an extension of the Childcare Works scheme, which works with councils to improve uptake of the free childcare available, especially by encouraging disadvantaged families to access the 15 hours free for two-year-olds.

The extension of this local engagement scheme comes as research shows in local areas where there is lowest uptake of the childcare offers there is a lack of awareness of what support is available.

---

News story: Mark Carney's term extended and Sir Jon Cunliffe re-appointed at the Bank of England

Mark Carney, Governor of the Bank of England will remain in his role until 31 January 2020, the Chancellor announced today (11 September 2018). The extension was agreed in an exchange of letters between the Governor and the Chancellor published this morning. Sir Jon Cunliffe, Deputy Governor of the Bank of England with responsibility for Financial Stability has also been re-appointed, effective from 1 November 2018.

Commenting on the extension of Mark Carney's time as Governor, the Chancellor said:

I'm delighted that the Governor has agreed to stay in his role for a further seven months to support a smooth exit from the European Union and provide vital stability for our economy.

Commenting on the re-appointment of Sir Jon Cunliffe, the Chancellor said:

I'm delighted to announce the re-appointment of Sir Jon Cunliffe for a further term as Deputy Governor, and I'm confident his extensive experience will continue to be a valuable asset to the Bank of England.

Further Information

- The letters between the Governor and the Chancellor are available here.
- The reappointment of Sir Jon Cunliffe was made by the Queen on the advice of the Prime Minister and Chancellor.

- Sir Jon's term will last until October 2023.
- Sir Jon leads the Bank of England's work on financial stability. He is a member of the Financial Policy Committee (FPC), the Monetary Policy Committee, the Board of the Prudential Regulation Committee and the Bank's Court of Directors. Further information can be found here.
- The Bank of England is the central bank of the UK. It is governed by a board of directors known as the Court of Directors. Further information can be found here.

Published 11 September 2018

---

News story: Welsh Secretary marks Aston Martin's investment in zero emission vehicle manufacturing at St Athan site

Welsh Secretary Alun Cairns has today welcomed the announcement that Aston Martin will invest a further £50 million at its new St Athan facility in Wales, which will become its centre for electrification and the home of the Lagonda brand. The investment will create an additional 200 jobs at the site and, in total, the new plant will bring up to 750 high skilled jobs to South Wales.

The announcement comes on the day that the Prime Minister outlines the UK Government's 'ambitious mission' to put the UK at the forefront of the design and manufacturing of zero-emission vehicles during her keynote address at the country's first ever Zero Emission Vehicle (ZEV) Summit in Birmingham.

Marking the announcement from Aston Martin today, Secretary of State for Wales Alun Cairns said:

This announcement comes as a huge boost to those based at Aston Martin's new state of the art manufacturing facility in St Athan, and I'm delighted that the skills and talents of a Welsh workforce will be delivering the high quality products that this flagship British brand is renowned for across the world.

The UK Government's mission is to put the country at the forefront of the design and manufacturing of zero emission vehicles. The fact that a company with a reputation that spans the continents, is choosing Wales as the centre of excellence for its electrification programme is a ringing endorsement of what our nation has to offer to the automotive sector, and I look forward to seeing the innovation come to life in the months and years ahead.