

L'Europe s'investit-elle suffisamment pour protéger les droits fondamentaux ?

27/06/2017 – Business, taxation and competition / Consumer affairs and public health

The European Commission has fined Google €2.42 billion for breaching EU antitrust rules. Google has abused its market dominance as a search engine by giving an illegal advantage to another Google product, its comparison shopping service.

Is Europe doing enough to protect fundamental rights?

Is Europe doing enough to protect fundamental rights? | European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights

1. Home >
2. Media >
3. Press releases >
4. Is Europe doing enough to protect fundamental rights?

Copyright © 2016 European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights

The Justice Secretary must deal with the epidemic of violence, drugs, overcrowding and understaffing in our Prisons – Burgon

Richard

Burgon MP, Labour's Shadow Justice Secretary, commenting on Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Prisons' report on Birmingham prison which is published tomorrow, said:

"As the evidence of the Conservative-created crisis in our prisons continues to mount, the Queen's Speech shows the Government has given up trying to sort out their mess.

"The Justice Secretary must deal with the epidemic of violence, drugs, overcrowding and understaffing, which was left to fester over the election campaign. To help get a grip of the situation, Labour would recruit 3,000 prisons officers."

Theresa May's reckless approach to our country's future will see a generation of young people losing out – Rayner

Angela Rayner MP, Labour's Shadow Secretary of State for Education, commenting on the Social Mobility Commission report, said:

"This report from the Government's own Social Mobility Commission shows that their policies will not improve social mobility in Britain.

"School budgets are being slashed, Sure Start Centres are being lost and there is nothing approaching a skills plan that will let us face the challenges of post-Brexit Britain.

"Theresa May's reckless approach to our country's future will see a generation of young people losing out. The next Labour government will ensure that wealth, power and opportunity are enjoyed by the many not the few."

Use Queen's Speech to end cuts to emergency services – Jeremy Corbyn

Labour has tabled an amendment to the Queen's Speech, which will be the first vote of the new Parliament, when voted on tomorrow (Wednesday), and a test case for MPs' approach to austerity.

After seven years of austerity, the amendment seeks to force the government to end cuts to the police and fire service and lift the Public Sector Pay Cap to give emergency and public service workers a pay rise.

Commenting on the amendment, Jeremy Corbyn, Leader of the Labour Party, said:

"You can't have safety and security on the cheap. It is plain to see that seven years of cuts to our emergency services has made us less safe; it's time to make a change.

"Our emergency service workers make us proud at the worst of times for our country, such as the Grenfell Tower Fire and the recent terrorist attacks, and deserve the pay rise they have been denied for seven years.

"Conservative cuts have failed. Labour has a different approach, which values those who look after us and will transform Britain for the many not the few."