A key point of interest is to share the UK's potential for technological innovation and sustainability. One of the most recent investments British-stakeholder investment comes by the hand of ATOME Energy PLC. The venture estimates an input of USD 550 million for the production of green hydrogen and ammonia in Paraguay.

Commissioner Mahony personally thanked all hosts and reflected on his time in Paraguay in his LinkedIn profile. On trade and new technologies, Commissioner Mahony said:

The UK is a powerhouse in areas such as the use of hydropower, solar energy or biomass. We also have expertise in more sustainable technology in agriculture, hydropower, health diagnostics and cyber security.

We are excited to share this with Paraguay.
