

Device enables people with arm disabilities following a stroke to do more physical training

New study shows a rehabilitation device can increase arm exercise in stroke patients to aid their recovery, without the need for supervision in hospital by a therapist.