

eNews from GAD: issue 36, July 2019

Over the last 100 years areas in which GAD actuaries contribute expertise has expanded significantly, moving away from our technical and compliance based roots. In this edition of eNews, John Bayliss discusses such an example: his involvement supporting the government's defence of a recent discrimination claim.

Also in this edition is the second in our series of centenary 'deep dives', which look at the contributions GAD has made and continues to make in different areas of public life. We consider GAD's history in supporting public service pensions and its future evolving role. Finally, we report from our centenary lecture which set out challenges facing the UK's pension and social care systems, as well as identifying areas where future contributions by actuaries are likely to be required.
