

Fish bred at Environment Agency's fish farm used for rehabilitation of armed forces

Fish bred at the national coarse fish farm in Calverton, Nottinghamshire have been used to stock the fishing lake at the Stanford Hall Rehabilitation Estate.

Portsmouth communities work together to tackle plastic pollution

An online plastic pollution workshop for Portsmouth last week (Friday 16 October) encouraged people to work together and inspire behaviour changes locally.

Seawick sea defences project

The Environment Agency's £1.1 million scheme to improve the resilience of the sea defences at Seawick, Essex has started.

Lake study aims to improve water quality

A study to understand options available to improve recreational use and boost water quality and wildlife at a popular Northumberland lake has started.

Environment Agency chair addresses World Pensions Summit

Emma Howard Boyd delivers a speech hosted virtually from The Hague, Netherlands.