L'Union européenne mobilise la communauté internationale pour la région du Sahel

La Conférence internationale de haut niveau sur le Sahel qui s'est tenue aujourd'hui à Bruxelles sous l'égide de l'Union européenne, des Nations Unies, de l'Union africaine et du groupe des pays du G5 Sahel (Burkina Faso, Mali, Mauritanie, Niger, Tchad) a permis de confirmer l'engagement politique aux côtés des pays du Sahel, de mobiliser un montant de €414 millions d'euros en soutien à la force conjointe du G5 Sahel, et de renforcer la coordination et efficacité de l'aide au développement durable de la région. A cette occasion, le Président Jean-Claude Juncker a déclaré: "Face à tant de facteurs d'instabilité si étroitement liés les uns aux autres, les réponses que nous apportons doivent être conséquemment ambitieuses et complètes. Sécurité et développement vont de pair et nous devons continuer à mobiliser tous les instruments dont nous disposons pour en garantir des effets visibles dans la région. Avec 100 millions d'euros mobilisés par l'Union européenne, nous doublons ainsi notre soutien en faveur de l'opérationnalisation de la Force conjointe du G5 Sahel, et je suis heureux de constater que tous les partenaires et amis du Sahel se sont joints à nos efforts." Avec 8 milliards d'euros d'aide au développement (2014-2020), l'UE est le principal donateur pour les pays du G5 Sahel. L'Année européenne du patrimoine culturel présente à la Foire du livre de Bruxelles

A l'occasion de l'Année européenne du Patrimoine culturel 2018, l'Union européenne est présente à l'événement culturel de premier plan à Bruxelles qu'est la Foire du Livre du 22 au 25 février – une vitrine d'exception pour 65 000 visiteurs, 198 exposants, 500 éditeurs représentés ainsi que 950 auteurs venus de Belgique, d'Europe et du monde entier. Tibor Navracsics, Commissaire européen chargé de l'éducation, de la culture, de la jeunesse et du sport, a déclaré: "La littérature est une part essentielle de notre patrimoine commun de l'Europe et nous célébrerons son rôle à sa juste mesure pendant l'Année européenne 2018 du patrimoine culturel. Les œuvres de certains écrivains comme Shakespeare, Franz Kafka ou Sándor Márai sont des trésors nationaux, mais elles font aussi partie de l'héritage culturel commun de l'Europe. Ces auteurs sont bien sûr des héros nationaux, ou locaux, mais ce sont également des héros européens." Demain, samedi 24 février à 11 heures, la Foire du Livre organisera un débat sur l'importance du patrimoine immatériel en Europe et sa signification pour notre identité commune. Commission to host a roundtable on cryptocurrencies

On Monday 26 February, the Commission will host a roundtable on "Cryptocurrencies – Opportunities and Risks" in Brussels under the chairmanship of Valdis Dombrovskis, Commission Vice-President in charge of Financial Stability, Financial Services and Capital Markets Union. Participants will exchange views on how the EU institutions, supervisors and Member States should respond to the challenges posed by fast technological developments, and seize the opportunities they offer. So-called cryptocurrencies (virtual currencies) and their underlying blockchain technology is affecting many sectors of the economy, including finance. In this context, the goal of the Commission is to ensure investor protection, market integrity and financial stability while taking full advantage of these new technological developments. The discussion will be organised around three themes: cryptocurrencies and their implications for financial markets, investor protection and market integrity in relation to cryptocurrencies as an emerging asset class, and the potential and challenges posed by initial coin offerings (ICOs). Participants will include EU institutions, EU countries, supervisors, central banks, industry, academics and crypto entrepreneurs. Vice-President Dombrovskis will brief the press on the outcome of the meeting in the Berlaymont VIP corner on Monday 26 February at 13:30 CET, and Europe by Satellite will transmit it live. EU Civil Protection Mechanism to gain satellite telecommunications system

Commissioner for Humanitarian Aid and Crisis Management Christos Stylianides met with Luxembourgish Ministers Daniel Kersch, responsible for Home Affairs, Civil Service and Administrative Reform and Romain Schneider, responsible for Social Security, Development Cooperation and Humanitarian Affairs and Sport, on the occasion of a new Luxembourgish contribution to strengthen the EU Civil Protection Mechanism: mobile, satellite-based telecommunications via the platform emergency.lu. This platform will establish internet and telephone communication directly in the aftermath of a crisis – if and when conventional tools of communication are temporarily out of order.

Commissioner Stylianides said: “We welcome this contribution which is testimony to Luxembourg’s long-standing tradition of providing high added-value capacities for a better EU response to disasters in Europe and worldwide. The new telecommunication platform emergency.lu will establish internet and telephone communication as in the aftermath of hurricanes Matthew and Irma that destroyed communication infrastructure in the Caribbean.” Commissioner Stylianides also met with Jan Jambon, Belgian Minister of the Interior. Speech by Vice-President for Energy Union Maroš Šefčovič at the Industry Days Forum on the Industry-led initiative on batteries / the EU Battery Alliance

It is a great pleasure to open this Panel on the EU Batteries Alliance.

Our objective for the Alliance is simple, but the challenge is immense. We want, almost from scratch, to create a competitive and sustainable, battery cell manufacturing in Europe supported by a full EU-based value chain.

I am saying “almost” because we have what it takes to become world leaders – we have strong research and innovation, we have leading companies in all the value chain, we have strong recycling competence, a highly-skilled workforce, an attractive ecosystem, we have political, regulatory, and financial support (we will come back to that), but ... – and it's a big BUT ...

We do not – as yet – have a scaled up manufacturing capacity in battery cells.

And what we are missing on, is huge: by 2025, the market in Europe is the European battery market could be worth around €250 billion per year [1]. As large as the entire Danish economy. Do we want to leave this to our global competitors?

To capture this market, or a great part of it, we need between ten and twenty Giga factories in Europe. It has been estimated that the size of the investment required is around €1 billion per 10 GWh. So even if this is not scientific, we would need around 20 billion euros investment. This is a huge investment of course. But it is within our reach (recall 250 billion euros mobilized thanks to the Juncker plan).

While this effort must be industry-led, the scale and speed needed means that this can only be a combined effort.

It is for the EU institutions, primarily the Commission and the European Investment Bank, and Member States to pool our resources and co-operate to create a supportive framework for this investment.

Since October the Batteries Alliance has helped to generate considerable traction with concrete projects and actions emerging.

EU industry has done its homework and shown that there is a willingness to make the investment and take the risks.

They are ready to take the lead.

Therefore, I am very pleased that I am joined by Peter (Carlsson – Northvolt), Holger (Gritzka – Terra-E) and Ghislain (Lescuyer – Saft) to give us a “front line” view on the projects they are carrying out, and the challenges they are facing.

The European Investment Bank is also a strategic partner. I am delighted that Andrew is here to tell us more about its proactive role and, of course, the recent approval of a first loan through the Innovfin EDP facility.

And we will also hear from Diego about the excellent work of InnoEnergy – and its network of more than 80 industrial and innovation actors – to jointly propose 20 priority actions to establish a full competitive value chain in Europe. Diego, I will be particularly interested to hear about the proposals for a value chain centred on “green” high performance batteries. Meaning: sustainable and responsible supply of raw materials, clean energy based production process, recyclability and second use. I am convinced this should be the basis for our global competitive advantage.

I have followed very closely the work of the industry and many Commission services have participated in it. There are many extremely interesting actions that we need to pursue, including:

- o simplification of approval procedures and permitting processes in the EU;
- o Imaginative ways of reducing the carbon footprint of battery manufacturing; and
- o Financing demo projects.

I could – but will not – continue.

This session, like the Alliance, needs to be driven by the Industry. We, the Commission, are here as system integrator or facilitator.

Within the Commission, I have secured the support from all my colleagues in the Energy Union project to ensure that the Alliance is a priority across the board.

We have also reached out to interested Member States – most recently last week in a high-level meeting – and we are now looking into very practical ways forward to create the right conditions for industry investment. This can only be a joint and concerted effort.

EU mobilises the international community for Africa's Sahel region

The International High Level Conference on the Sahel, co-chaired today by the European Union, the United Nations, the African Union and the G5 Sahel group of countries (Burkina Faso, Chad, Mali, Mauritania, Niger), has mobilised political support for the Sahel region, €414 million to support the Joint security Force of the G5 Sahel whilst reinforcing the coordination of sustainable development efforts in the region.

On the occasion, President Jean-Claude Juncker said: “Instability has many factors so our response must be linked and ambitious. Security and development must go hand in hand. To do so, we must continue to mobilise all the instruments we have at our disposal. The EU has doubled its support to €100 million to reinforce the operationalisation of the G5 Sahel Joint Force and I am proud that all our friends and partners of the Sahel joined us in these efforts.”

Key outcomes of the High Level Conference:

- Reinforced political support to the region: A Joint Communiqué was adopted, reaffirming support to assist the G5 countries in bringing greater stability to the region. Important support was given to the Mali peace process: those that threaten the process can face sanctions.
- Increased financial assistance for security: the EU doubled its funding to the G5 Sahel Joint Force to €100 million, which aims to improve regional security and fight terrorism. The EU and its Member States together contributed to half of the international support of the Joint Force. This new funding fully meets the needs of the Joint Force and gives it the means to improve security conditions in the region.
- Better coordination of development efforts: with €8 billion in development aid over 2014-2020, the EU is the biggest donor to the G5 Sahel countries. The EU will play a leading role in the Alliance for the Sahel launched in July 2017. This new initiative aims to coordinate and deliver aid quicker and more efficiently in the most fragile regions and is open to all the partners of the international community.

Background

The EU uses all its tools to support development efforts in the region, notably the 'EU Emergency Trust Fund for stability and addressing root causes of irregular migration and displaced persons in Africa' under which €843 million has been committed so far. The EU is also a member and key supporter of the newly formed Alliance for the Sahel, set up recently to coordinate existing EU and Member States development assistance better and faster in the region.

In 2014, Burkina Faso, Chad, Mali, Mauritania, and Niger set up the "G5 Sahel" group of countries to foster close cooperation in the region and tackle the major challenges that these countries face – from extreme poverty, terrorism or trafficking of human beings, which has potential spill-over effects outside the region. Since then, the EU has stepped up cooperation with this African-led initiative to build a strong partnership on many fronts: from political dialogue, to development and humanitarian support, to strengthening security and tackling irregular migration.

The EU is itself a key security player in the region, with its 3 active Common Security and Defence Policy missions: EUCAP Sahel Niger, EUCAP Sahel Mali, EU training mission \(EUTM\) in Mali.
