

Remarques du Commissaire Moscovici à la conférence de presse sur le paquet « Printemps » du semestre européen 2017

Over the past 20 years, the European Union has put in place some of the highest common asylum standards in the world. And in the past two years, European migration policy has advanced in leaps and...

'Europe will not be made all at once, or according to a single plan. It will be built through concrete achievements which first create a de facto solidarity.' Robert Schuman 9 May 1950 on 25 March 2017, ...

In response to the illegal annexation of Crimea and deliberate destabilisation of a neighbouring sovereign country, the EU has imposed restrictive measures against the Russian Federation. Overview...

European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker delivered his annual State of the Union speech at the European Parliament on 14 September 2016, just two days ahead of the informal meeting of 27...

Enlargement is the process whereby countries join the EU. Since it was founded in 1957, the EU has grown from 6 member countries to 28. Any European country that respects the principles of liberty, ...

Over the past 20 years, the European Union has put in place some of the highest common asylum standards in the world. And in the past two years, European migration policy has advanced in leaps and...

'Europe will not be made all at once, or according to a single plan. It will be built through concrete achievements which first create a de facto solidarity.' Robert Schuman 9 May 1950 on 25 March 2017, ...

In response to the illegal annexation of Crimea and deliberate destabilisation of a neighbouring sovereign country, the EU has imposed restrictive measures against the Russian Federation. Overview...

European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker delivered his annual State of the Union speech at the European Parliament on 14 September 2016, just two days ahead of the informal meeting of 27...

Enlargement is the process whereby countries join the EU. Since it was founded in 1957, the EU has grown from 6 member countries to 28. Any European country that respects the principles of liberty,...

Remarks by Vice-President Dombrovskis at the European Semester Spring Package press conference

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, we have adopted the spring economic package – the highlight of the country-specific phase of the European Semester. The package includes recommendations for 27 Member States – so all Member States except Greece – and fiscal decisions concerning several countries.

This year, the spring economic package comes against a positive backdrop: the European economy continues its recovery, now for the fifth consecutive year.

GDP growth, for the EU as a whole, is expected to be at 1.9% both this year and the next. All Member States are expected to grow. Employment has reached the highest number ever and public finances are improving.

We should use this as an opportunity to make European economies more competitive, resilient and innovative. And we need to make growth truly inclusive, so that all people feel the recovery.

This is the overall objective of the reform efforts we are recommending today.

They are targeted to address the specific socio-economic challenges in each Member State. They focus on how to use reforms to make growth more inclusive and reinvigorate productivity.

There is no quick fix. Inclusive growth requires time and a mix of policies.

Our experience shows that labour market reforms bring good results. Several Member States have implemented reforms to strengthen the performance of their labour markets and the sustainability of social protection systems. More needs to be done to provide well-targeted assistance to job seekers, which was also shown in our country assessments. We need to work to optimise social spending.

Social protection systems must be better targeted to provide wide and adequate income support to all people in need.

Income inequality needs to be addressed when designing policy reforms across the board. For example, well-designed tax and social benefit systems contribute to increasing employment and reducing poverty. We traditionally recommend shifting the tax burden away from low-paid labour to a tax basis less detrimental to growth and this is reflected in our recommendations to several Member States.

Relevant skills, effective education systems and life-long learning are essential not only for creating inclusive growth, but also for lifting productivity. Robust productivity is our guarantee for rising living standards.

So how do we raise productivity?

We need to support innovation and we need more investment. Many of our recommendations are targeted at addressing barriers to investment – for example, disproportionate regulatory requirements and burdensome administrative systems. For many countries we recommend opening up product and services markets, in a way to boost innovation and lift productivity growth.

Speaking of macroeconomic imbalances in specific countries, in February we left open the cases of Cyprus, Italy and Portugal – all experiencing excessive imbalances. After having scrutinised their National Reform Plans and following additional clarifications, we concluded that our analysis does not provide ground for moving these countries into the corrective arm of macroeconomic imbalances procedure.

On fiscal, although the overall picture of public finances continues to improve, several countries still have high levels of private and public debt, which need to be set on a downwards path.

Today we have positive news for Croatia and Portugal – we recommend the Council to abrogate the Excessive Deficit Procedures for the two countries as they have brought their budget deficits below the 3% of GDP and this for the whole forecast horizon.

As regards the preventive arm, there are 8 countries – Germany, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Denmark, Sweden – that are projected to be at or above their medium-term budgetary objectives both in 2017 and 2018. These countries have no SGP-related CSR.

Unfortunately, we also see that there are Member States diverging from their budgetary objectives – this is why, for example, Italy had to take additional structural measures worth 0.2% of GDP this year.

And – we are recommending the Council to give warning to Romania on the existence of a significant observed deviation from the adjustment path towards the medium-term objective in 2016.

I will now pass floor to Marianne who will focus on employment and social aspects in this package.

Speaking points by Commissioner Thyssen on the 2017 country-specific recommendations as part of the European Semester Spring Package

Speech by Commissioner Thyssen in charge of Employment, Social Affairs, Skills and Labour Mobility

Ladies and gentlemen, good morning,

Indeed, we have the highest employment rate ever measured in the European Union, and we have now nearly 233 million people employed.

Since 2014, when this Commission started, over six million jobs have been created in Europe.

While over 19 million people are still looking for a job, unemployment is now at 8%. This is the lowest level since 2009.

And last week our spring economic forecast confirmed that we are firmly on the path towards economic recovery and delivering on our priority number one: more jobs and growth.

But this growth needs to reach each and every one in our societies.

This Commission has made clear from the beginning that the social dimension of Europe is at the heart of our work. This means putting people first and delivering for them.

The core of our concerns is to address inequalities, both within and between Member States. Inequalities do not only divide our societies, but also put a break on our competitiveness and economic growth.

We are working on two fronts to make this happen. We have introduced a strong focus on social considerations into the European Semester.

We clearly ask Member States to pay greater attention to the social impact of their reform efforts— this is both a matter of democratic legitimacy and of economic sustainability.

Since its start, this Commission is itself also paying greater attention to the social impact of all our Commission policies and initiatives. This is even more so following the presentation of the European Pillar of Social Rights. Coordination through the Semester is one of the options to apply the principles of the Pillar and make them a reality in practice. Let me give you a few examples.

The first principle of the Pillar stresses the importance of education, training and lifelong learning. This is not "par hasard", this is not a coincidence. It is a political choice in light of our improving economy, with employment picking up and a growing labour force. To keep pace with this evolution, we call for more reforms to up-skill and re-skill people in Europe in our Semester recommendations.

Improving the access and quality of education and training is essential to fight poverty and inequalities, but also to attract investment and provide our businesses with a skilled and productive labour force. We need inclusive societies and labour markets, which leave no one behind. In the new world of work we need all people on board.

The Pillar also calls for "a right to fair wages that provide for a decent standard of living". In some Member States now, we recommend that the context of economic growth should be more reflected into the wages of workers, such as Germany and The Netherlands. Social partners of course have a fundamental role in this process. This is why we also call upon Member States to enhance the capacity of social dialogue where needed.

And of course the Pillar calls for social protection systems which represent a genuine investment in people in Europe; and which empower all people in Europe to live to their full potential. In the Semester this is translated for instance in our recommendations to some Member States to improve the adequacy of their social protection systems, among which Bulgaria and Hungary. Or to provide affordable and good quality childcare services, for instance for Spain and Ireland.

We have also recently launched the new Social Scoreboard, which tracks key societal trends and performances across the European Union. Having a clear overview of where every Member State stands as regards the social dimension, will for sure enrich the debate, strengthen our ability to learn from each other and also motivate Member States to accelerate necessary reforms. This important analysis will in the future also guide us in preparing the Semester recommendations and making concrete progress towards a "social triple A" for the EU.

Ladies and gentlemen,

Our societies, economies and labour markets are changing radically. We must be ready to harness the new opportunities and adapt to the challenges these changes are bringing. The European Pillar of Social Rights provides the reference framework. The European Semester is key to drive the necessary process of reforms at national level. Now it is for national and local governments, the social partners and civil society at large to follow up and work with us for a prosperous and social Europe.

Thank you.

Statement by Michel Barnier at the press conference following the General Affairs Council (Art. 50)

Merci Louis.

Bonjour à chacune et chacun d'entre vous et merci pour votre attention.

La réunion d'aujourd'hui est une étape politique importante. Puisque, comme l'a dit Louis Grech – Président efficace de cette réunion – ces directives fixent au nom des 27 mon mandat, ma feuille de route, et confirment la mission qui m'a été confiée par le Président de la Commission puis par les 27 Etats membres réunis il y a quelques semaines au Conseil européen.

C'est un point d'unité extrêmement important pour les négociations, c'est aussi une preuve de détermination et de confiance qui m'oblige et qui m'honore tout au long de la mission que je vais conduire.

Cette unité n'existe pas seulement entre les 27, mais aussi entre les institutions, le Conseil où nous sommes, la Commission et le Parlement européen.

Comme vous le savez, les directives qui ont été adoptées sur la base de la proposition du Collège du 3 mai dernier, portent sur la première phase de cette négociation et uniquement sur cette première phase.

Elles concernent un nombre de sujets limités que nous considérons comme prioritaires, incluant les droits des citoyens et le règlement financier. Ce sont les sujets que nous devons traiter pour aboutir à un retrait ordonné que nous devons organiser, conformément au traité.

Ladies and gentlemen,

From the day the UK decided to leave, the EU has gone through an intense preparatory process.

We are ready and well-prepared:

- We have a clear mandate supported by all 27 Member States.
- We have a solid resolution from the European Parliament.
- We have excellent working relations between all EU institutions.
- We have a negotiation team. All structures are in place.

The new Brexit Council working group will meet tomorrow already. In the course of the next few days we will finalise our negotiating positions on the key subjects for the first phase of the negotiations.

These positions will then be sent to the UK. I expect this to happen very quickly, very quickly, after the elections.

In line with our transparency policy, we will publish our position papers and negotiating documents.

I hope to organise the first round of negotiations as soon as possible, hopefully in the week of 19 June.

I would like to be able to give a first report to the European Council on 22-23 June, exactly one year after the date of the referendum and less than three months after Theresa May's notification letter.

I hope to see our British colleagues at the negotiation table as soon as possible. And look forward to work in a positive atmosphere to find common ground.

Nous aurons besoin évidemment de progrès suffisant sur les sujets de la première phase afin de pouvoir négocier, dans la deuxième phase – le plus vite possible à la fin de cette année ou au début de l'année prochaine – la relation future entre l'Union et le Royaume-Uni.

Et je répète que nous aurons besoin – j'espère que tout le monde a bien compris cela – de progrès suffisant sur cette première phase. Ce sera ma responsabilité comme négociateur de proposer au Conseil – ou de ne pas proposer au Conseil – de constater ces progrès suffisants. J'espère franchement être en situation de pouvoir le faire.

Pourquoi ce séquençage ?

Parce que nous devons apporter des réponses à ceux que la décision britannique de quitter l'Union européenne met en difficulté immédiate et pour lesquels cette décision crée une incertitude juridique pour leur propre vie quotidienne ou familiale :

- Les citoyens européens ou britanniques qui vivent de part et d'autre du channel et qui doivent continuer à pouvoir vivre comme avant.
- Les très nombreux porteurs de projets qui comptent sur les fonds européens : ils doivent pouvoir mener leurs projets à bien. Lors de mes visites sur le terrain dans chacun des Etats membres, et dernièrement à Dublin devant les deux chambres du Parlement réunies, les parlementaires nationaux me disent l'inquiétude des Présidents de régions, des maires, des organisations syndicales ou professionnels à propos du maintien de l'engagement financier accordé aux projets auxquels ils se consacrent.
- Et puis évidemment en Irlande, les habitants, les agriculteurs, les entrepreneurs des régions frontalières, en Irlande et en Irlande du nord qui craignent le rétablissement d'une frontière physique. Nous devons les rassurer sur ce point. J'ai vu cette inquiétude sur le terrain, encore une fois vendredi dernier à Monaghan sur la frontière.

Nous devons montrer que nous sommes capables de trouver des réponses sur ces questions difficiles. C'est en réussissant cette première phase des négociations que nous poserons les bases de la confiance nécessaire pour négocier aussitôt après le nouveau partenariat entre l'Union et le Royaume-Uni.

Plus vite nous obtiendrons un accord sur ces points prioritaires, plus tôt nous pourrons commencer à discuter de cette relation future dans un esprit constructif, ce qui est mon état d'esprit au tout début de cette négociation.