

HK's industrial past inspires art

As Kwun Tong transforms itself into a business area, a revitalised park in the middle of the district serves as a reminder of Hong Kong's industrial past. Artworks representing iconic items that were once made in Hong Kong decorate the newly revamped InPARK, harking back to the days when the district was a key industrial area.

News.gov.hk spoke to three of the artists whose works are on display and the head of the Art Promotion Office to learn about how the revitalisation of the former Tsun Yip Street Playground has enhanced the vibrancy of public spaces in the area.

The story appears on news.gov.hk today (March 17) in both text and video format.
