

Innotech transforms construction

Hong Kong's first safety experience training centre for the construction industry was launched at the Hong Kong Institute of Construction. The institute offers more than 200 courses incorporating simulation-based training for secondary school students, transferees and industry practitioners.

News.gov.hk spoke to the institute's Director Francis Wong, Supervising Instructor (Welding) Chung Kai-man and two students to learn more about the innovative training facilities.

The story appears on news.gov.hk today (April 14) in both text and video format.
