Labour will put 10,000 more police on the streets to cut crime

Labour is today committing to provide funding to the 43 forces across England and Wales to hire an extra 10,000 officers operating in community policing roles. We will provide the framework to enable community engagement and funding to ensure at least the equivalent of one more bobby per electoral ward.

Ιt

will mean an extra police officer dedicated to community policing in each electoral ward in England and Wales to tackle crime for the many not the few.

- Labour
 - will add 10,000 new police officers for England and Wales
- Paid
 - for by reversing cuts to Capital Gains Tax
- Reported
 - crime is rising under the Tories, up for almost every police force
- Under
 - Theresa May, the Tories have cut over 20,000 police officers since 2010
- They
 - have also broken their pledge to protect the police budget
- Labour
 - will protect current police levels and not cut the police budget

Almost every police force in the country recorded an increase in crime over the last year, with worrying rises in some of the most violent offences, including gun and knife crime and homicide. Since 2010, under Theresa May, police numbers have been cut by 20,000. Labour will reverse cuts to Capital Gains Tax which will more than fund these new officers in addition to guaranteeing current police levels.

Jeremy Corbyn MP, Leader of the Labour

Party, will make the pledge on a visit to Southampton on Tuesday 2 May. He will say:

"Cutting police numbers especially when there is more crime to deal with is unacceptable. That's why Labour will put 10,000 new police officers on our streets. The safety of our communities is vital to us all.

"Community policing means uniformed officers being visible, local and accessible. They engage with the public, have a detailed local knowledge and build a network of relationships.

"That's why Labour will reduce crime by putting more police in the community to make sure policing works for the many not the few."

Diane Abbott MP, Labour's Shadow Home Secretary, she will say:

"Theresa May failed to protect communities as Home Secretary and has continued to fail them as Prime Minister.

"Labour will reverse the Tories' tax breaks for the rich, providing new money that can be used to put a bobby on the beat in every electoral ward in the country. We will reinforce confidence in our police forces, with a renewed focus on working with communities, and for communities to fight crime."
