Demining teams keep finding newly planted landmines after each truce in Yemen: Project Masam

RIYADH: No amount of denial by Yemen's Houthi militia could hide the crime they had been committing against the Yemeni people through their continuing mine-laying operations, the managing director of the Saudi-backed Project Masam demining initiative said on Wednesday.

Ousama Algosaibi, Project Masam's managing director, said a total of 417,103 landmines, unexploded ordnance (UXO), and improvised explosive devices (IEDs) had been removed in Yemen since June 2018.

The explosives had been indiscriminately planted, posing dangers to civilians, he said.

Turkiye strikes Kurdish militants in Iraq again after warning of retaliation for Ankara bombing

BEIRUT: Turkish warplanes launched a new round of airstrikes against Kurdish militant targets in Iraq on Wednesday hours after the foreign minister warned that Turkiye would hit the militant group's positions in Syria and Iraq in retaliation for a suicide bombing in Ankara earlier this week. The outlawed Kurdistan Workers' Party, or PKK, claimed responsibility for Sunday's attack outside the Interior Ministry in Ankara in which one attacker blew himself up and another would-be bomber was killed in a shootout with police. Two police were wounded in the attack.

'Lebanon is not for sale': Minister calls for hard-line approach to Syrian refugees

BEIRUT: Bassam Mawlawi, Lebanon's caretaker interior minister, said on Wednesday that his country "will not allow the random Syrian presence."

He claimed that "a large percentage, exceeding 30 percent, of various and major crimes are committed by Syrians in Lebanon" and "cooperation" is required "to preserve our environment and our country's identity."

His comments came against the backdrop of growing concern in Lebanon about the increasing numbers of Syrian refugees crossing the border.

Western countries want a UN team created to monitor rights violations and abuses in Sudan

GENEVA: Four Western countries floated a proposal Wednesday for the United Nations' top human rights body to appoint a team of experts to monitor and report on abuses and rights violations in war-wracked Sudan. Britain, Germany, Norway and the United States are leading the call for the Human Rights Council to name a three-person fact-finding mission to look into possible crimes against refugees, women and children, and others in Sudan.
