

New blood test could help doctors identify viral infections more easily

Clinical researchers from the NIHR Imperial Biomedical Research Centre (BRC) have developed a new test which could help doctors to more easily distinguish what kind of infection a patient may have and prescribe effective treatments more quickly.