

River project vitalises urban habitat

Rebranded as Tsui Ping River, a revitalised open nullah at King Yip Street in Kwun Tong now provides a green and vibrant waterway that is accessible to all, bringing the Government's "River in the City" concept to life.

News.gov.hk spoke to an engineer from the Drainage Services Department about how the project balances ecological conservation with practicality, and to a representative from the Energizing Kowloon East Office about the river's part in the district's overall transformation.

The story is available at www.news.gov.hk/eng/feature from today (January 26) in text and video format.