

Smart living attracts IT talent

The InnoCell project next to the Science Park is being developed by the Hong Kong Science and Technology Parks Corporation and is slated for completion in 2020. It will provide about 500 residential units for local and overseas technology talent, and is the first project in Hong Kong to adopt modular integrated construction technology, which will significantly reduce construction time.

News.gov.hk spoke to the corporation's Chief Project Development Officer to find out how this new infrastructure project will help foster the development of the innovation and technology ecosystem in Hong Kong.

The story appears on news.gov.hk today (June 16) in text and video format.