

EPD investigates short-term non-compliance with contract standards found in T·PARK's stack gas monitoring

The Environmental Protection Department (EPD) said today (November 22) that it is conducting an in-depth investigation into the short-term exceedance of emission standards of total organic carbon from T·PARK's flue stacks on a few occasions during the monitoring period from last October to this July.

The EPD has been taking very stringent monitoring on air emissions from all waste treatment facilities. During the monitoring period from last October to this July, the department found that some data of the total organic carbon from the flue stacks in T·PARK exceeded the emission standards under the contract in short term on a few occasions, including the half-hourly average concentration and the hourly average emission rate temporarily exceeding the emission standards, while the daily average concentration and emission rate maintained compliance with emission standards.

Total organic carbon is not a parameter under the statutory Air Quality Objectives. The contract between the EPD and the contractor of T·PARK has set emission standards for total organic carbon emitted by T·PARK's flue stacks, with a view to ensuring proper operation of the facility.

In addition to requesting more information from the contractor for investigations, the EPD deducted the operation fees for the incident according to the contract provisions. As the contractor had different views on whether the total organic carbon emitted by the facility itself had violated the contract provisions, it had appealed against the department's investigation and the penalty imposed. It also conducted its own investigation and tried to provide supplementary information, in an attempt to clarify the causes of short-term exceedance of standard in some of the monitoring data of total organic carbon. To ensure impartiality of the investigation, the EPD has suspended the release of data reports during the period. Nevertheless, the department has been closely monitoring all data, which showed that all other emission values (including dioxins, particulates, nitrogen oxides and other emission parameters) are in compliance with standards and requirements.

The latest contentious monitoring data was recorded in July this year. The incident is currently under final review and would soon be concluded. The EPD will upload all the data reports again for the relevant period once the investigation is completed.

SFST's speech at Hong Kong Institute of Certified Public Accountants 2024 Annual Dinner (English only)

Following is the speech by the Secretary for Financial Services and the Treasury, Mr Christopher Hui, at the Hong Kong Institute of Certified Public Accountants (HKICPA) 2024 Annual Dinner today (November 22):

Roy (President of the Hong Kong Institute of Certified Public Accountants, Mr Roy Leung), 鄧永祥 (Deputy Commissioner of the Office of the Commissioner of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) Mr Li Yongsheng) 李永勝 (Deputy Director-General of the Department of Administration and Finance of the Liaison Office of the Central People's Government in the HKSAR, Mr Li Xuhong), distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen,

Good evening. It is my great pleasure to join you all at the 2024 Annual Dinner of the Hong Kong Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

The theme of this year's dinner is "Building Community", which I believe is at the top of the HKICPA's agenda as it continues to reposition itself and refocus its strategic plan on furthering the development of the profession under the new regulatory regime. At the same time, it also aptly summarises the underlying principle of the various initiatives that have been rolled out by the HKSAR Government over the past year.

In order to build an accounting community with high standards of professionalism and integrity, work has to be done both from within and without.

As sustainability disclosure has become an integral part of the global financial landscape, the development of green and sustainable finance in Hong Kong presents the golden opportunity to revitalise and expand the accounting community. The HKICPA has seized the occasion to lead the profession in taking an active role in the initiative, especially in our pursuit to be among the first jurisdictions to align the local sustainability disclosure requirements with the international standards issued by the International Sustainability Standards Board (ISSB).

The HKICPA's earlier consultation on the draft Hong Kong Standards is only the first step towards the development of the sustainability disclosure ecosystem in Hong Kong. Ongoing collaborations among the local accounting profession, other financial services sectors and the international community are crucial to enable credible implementation of disclosures, provide necessary support to and facilitate utilisation of technological solutions by preparers, reporting and assurance professionals, and sustainability-related service providers. These are all new pathways for the accounting sector to expand its presence and influence in the local, regional and global markets, which can lead to its renewed attraction to young talent.

In parallel to the ongoing endeavours to solidify the local accounting community, efforts are also being made to reinforce the long-standing connections with our counterparts from other local sectors as well as the Mainland and overseas.

Last month, the HKICPA hosted the 2024 Cross-straits, Hong Kong and Macau Accounting Profession Conference, which was the first after the suspension since 2019 due to the pandemic. I learned that it was a great success, bringing together accounting and other market leaders to engage in in-depth discussion and idea exchanges on salient development issues. Notably, it offered much inspiration on opportunities and challenges under the global sustainability development trends.

Most recently, we, in collaboration with the HKICPA, the Inland Revenue Department and the Accounting and Financial Reporting Council (AFRC), have announced the initiative to require disclosure of practising certificate numbers in auditors' reports and corporate tax returns. It is a proactive response to the profession's concern over bogus CPAs (certified public accountants) and audit malpractices, which, as you would certainly agree, undermines the credibility of not only the profession but also financial reporting of the Hong Kong markets in general.

By requiring disclosure of practising certificate numbers, the initiative aims to enhance the accountability of auditors' report signatories, heighten the awareness of users of accounting services about the importance of audit quality and, at the same time, facilitate the identification and elimination of black sheep from the sector. We believe with the concerted efforts of the sector, regulator, enforcement agents and the general public, the professional foundation of the local accounting community can be reinforced. With the members' consultation on the amended professional standards under way, your support and insight would be invaluable in bringing the initiative into full play.

Ladies and gentlemen, with the new regulatory regime of the accounting sector entering its third year of operation, I am glad to see that the HKICPA has been proactive in maximising the value of the Institute as a statutory professional body to drive the various development initiatives in the pipeline. We look forward to the continued collaboration with the HKICPA, the AFRC and each and every one of you to create opportunities for the advancement of the accounting profession, the financial markets and the Hong Kong community as a whole.

Last but not least, my sincere thanks to the Institute for inviting me to this auspicious occasion, and may I wish you all good health and the best of business in the coming year. Thank you.

Sample taken from wild pig tests positive for ASF virus

The Agriculture, Fisheries and Conservation Department (AFCD) today (November 22) announced that a sample taken from a wild pig tested positive for the African Swine Fever (ASF) virus.

The AFCD mounted a wild pig capture and dispatch operation yesterday (November 21) at Fung Yuen Road, Tai Po. Samples were collected from the four wild pigs captured for testing under the surveillance programme for ASF. A sample collected from one wild pig tested positive for the ASF virus. The AFCD will report the findings to the World Organisation for Animal Health and maintain surveillance in the wild pig population.

There is no pig farm located within 3 kilometres of Fung Yuen Road. At the moment, no pig farms are found affected by this case. All local pig farmers will be notified of the case and advised to enhance farm biosecurity to prevent intrusion of wild pigs and introduction of the ASF virus into their farms. The AFCD has been closely monitoring the health condition of pigs on all local pig farms. Local pig farmers are also reminded to notify the AFCD if their pigs show any health issues.

An AFCD spokesman said, "ASF is a highly contagious disease affecting domestic and wild pigs. However, it is not a zoonotic disease and does not infect humans and hence does not cause any food safety risk. Well-cooked pork is safe for consumption. The case will not affect the supply of live pigs to the local market."

The spokesman stressed that for personal safety and prevention of foods contaminated with the ASF virus to be introduced to wild pigs, members of the public should keep away from them. Do not feed any wild animals, including wild pigs, and ensure that outdoor garbage is disposed of properly. If any dead wild pig is found, please report via 1823.

With a view to strengthening the surveillance of ASF on local wild pigs, the AFCD has been working with the Food and Environmental Hygiene Department (FEHD) on a surveillance programme for ASF since late 2019. This has involved testing of the ASF virus in wild pig carcasses reported by the FEHD. The programme includes the New Territories and Kowloon. Other areas found with a large number of wild pig deaths are also included. To enable early detection, samples collected from wild pigs captured by the AFCD are also tested for the ASF virus.

Speech by FS at Awards Presentation Ceremony and Dinner of the Hong Kong ICT Awards 2024 (English only) (with photos/video)

Following is the speech by the Financial Secretary, Mr Paul Chan, at the Awards Presentation Ceremony and Dinner of the Hong Kong ICT Awards 2024 today (November 22):

Professor Qin (Chairman of the Grand Judging Panel of the Hong Kong ICT Awards 2024 and the President of Lingnan University, Professor Joe Qin), 王寧 (the Deputy Director-General of the Youth Department of the Liaison Office of the Central People's Government in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Ms Wan Ning), Dong (Secretary for Innovation, Technology and Industry, Professor Sun Dong), ladies and gentlemen,

Good evening. I am pleased to join you tonight, for the annual, and much anticipated, Hong Kong Information and Communications Technology Awards Presentation Ceremony. Let me first congratulate the winners, and finalists of this prestigious award. Your dedication and achievements are an inspiration to practitioners, entrepreneurs and students, to the innovation and technology industries, and to us all.

For 18 years now, the HKICT Awards has celebrated the exceptional achievements of individuals and organisations in a diversity of sectors and businesses. They put a deserved spotlight on the remarkable talent, creativity and dedication of people seeking to harness technology to reinvent products and services, to improve efficiency, to offer better care to the needy, and ultimately to make our lives and the world better.

In just a few minutes, we'll know all about those elite achievers – and their innovative applications and solutions.

This year's award, I'm pleased to note, introduces a new "Best Use of AI Award" in all eight categories, to recognise and honour the efforts of those harnessing the power of AI (artificial intelligence) to transform our businesses and ways of living.

The HKSAR (Hong Kong Special Administrative Region) Government, too, believes in the vast potential of AI. It is a sweeping force in boosting productivity and enhancing the competitiveness of the economy. We believe AI can become a strategic pillar of our innovation and technology sector. And we have been working on multiple fronts to make it thrive. That includes supporting R&D (research and development), nurturing start-ups, fostering cross-boundary and cross-industry collaboration, attracting strategic enterprises, and building the related infrastructure, including a supercomputing centre.

But above all, it is people and talent that matter, if we are to realise this vision. We must raise the AI literacy and preparedness of our community. That has to take a whole-of-society approach, starting with children’s education, integrating AI into school and university curricula, and supporting the training of professionals and continuous learning.

My thanks to the organisers of the Hong Kong ICT Awards, and to the high-profile judges of the eight award categories. Your expertise and commitment to excellence can only inspire the continuing growth and success of our innovation and technology industry – and the economy, and community, of Hong Kong.

Ladies and gentlemen, I know you will enjoy this very special evening and the good company all about you.

Thank you.
