

Theresa May seems determined to turn a blind eye to inconvenient facts – Abbott

Diane

Abbott MP, Labour's Shadow Home Affairs Secretary, commenting on reports in the Independent that Theresa May blocked attempts to highlight the impact migration can have on the economy and public services during the EU referendum, said:

"This

raises serious questions about the Prime Minister's priorities.

"Exiting

the EU will mean reforming our entire immigration system. But doing so should not be at the cost of jobs and the economy.

"Unfortunately,

Theresa May seems determined to turn a blind eye to inconvenient facts.

"This report should be published in full."

Peter Dowd response to Public Accounts Committee report into Concentrix

Peter

Dowd MP, Labour's Shadow Chief Secretary to the Treasury, commenting on the Public Accounts Committee report into Concentrix, said:

"The

findings by the Public Accounts Committee reaffirms the Government's continued

inability to take responsibility for the shambolic decision to contract out tax credits to Concentrix. It is now crystal clear that Concentrix should never have been awarded the contact.

"This

damning report reveals what many of us have long suspected, first that neither

HMRC nor Concentrix bothered to check for error or fraud before suspending tax credits to some of the most vulnerable in our society.

“

Secondly, that Concentrix’s claims of mass savings were inflated from the start; they have barely recouped one fifth of their initial savings figure. Third, that HMRC is woefully ill-equipped to outsource such important decisions to the private sector, instead of penalising Concentrix for mistakes HMRC tripled its commission.

“This whole saga makes a mockery of the current tendering process. Given these damning findings, Concentrix should be banned from any future Government contracts and the Government should seek to recoup the majority of its commission.”

Peter Dowd response to Public Accounts Committee report into Concentrix

Peter

Dowd MP, Labour’s Shadow Chief Secretary to the Treasury, commenting on the Public Accounts Committee report into Concentrix, said:

“The findings by the Public Accounts Committee reaffirms the Government’s continued inability to take responsibility for the shambolic decision to contract out tax credits to Concentrix. It is now crystal clear that Concentrix should never have been awarded the contract.

“This damning report reveals what many of us have long suspected, first that neither HMRC nor Concentrix bothered to check for error or fraud before suspending tax credits to some of the most vulnerable in our society.

“

Secondly, that Concentrix’s claims of mass savings were inflated from the start; they have barely recouped one fifth of their initial savings figure. Third,

that
HMRC is woefully ill-equipped to outsource such important decisions to the private sector, instead of penalising Concentrix for mistakes HMRC tripled its commission.

“This whole saga makes a mockery of the current tendering process. Given these damning findings, Concentrix should be banned from any future Government contracts and the Government should seek to recoup the majority of its commission.”

The Government needs to provide answers on how it will keep the UK as an attractive university destination for EU students – Blomfield

Paul Blomfield MP,
Labour’s Shadow Minister for Exiting the European Union, commenting on the 6 percent fall in applications from non-UK European Union students, said:

“These latest UCAS figures show yet another drop in applications from non-UK EU students to our universities.

“The Government’s failure to provide certainty to non-UK European citizens living, working and studying here is harming our world-class universities.

“The Government urgently needs to provide answers on how it will keep the UK as an attractive university destination for EU students, as we leave the EU.

“Thousands of jobs depend on it, as well as the diversity of our campuses and cities.

“One of Labour’s six tests for the final Brexit deal is a strong and collaborative future relationship with the EU. Strengthening our education exports is a vital part of this.”

The Government needs to provide answers on how it will keep the UK as an attractive university destination for EU students – Blomfield

Paul Blomfield MP,
Labour's Shadow Minister for Exiting the European Union, commenting on the 6 percent fall in applications from non-UK European Union students, said:

“These latest UCAS figures show yet another drop in applications from non-UK EU students to our universities.

“The Government's failure to provide certainty to non-UK European citizens living, working and studying here is harming our world-class universities.

“The Government urgently needs to provide answers on how it will keep the UK as an attractive university destination for EU students, as we leave the EU.

“Thousands of jobs depend on it, as well as the diversity of our campuses and cities.

“One of Labour's six tests for the final Brexit deal is a strong and collaborative future relationship with the EU. Strengthening our education exports is a vital part of this.”