

The Treasury's admission is a clear indication that the Conservatives' chaotic attempts to circumvent Parliament must come to an end – Dowd

Peter Dowd MP, Labour's Shadow Chief Secretary to the Treasury,

commenting on reports that the Government has been forced to accept the need for a parliamentary vote on its £1 billion deal with the DUP, said:

"The Treasury's admission of the need for a parliamentary vote on the £1 billion DUP bribe is a clear indication that the Conservatives' chaotic attempts to circumvent Parliament must come to an end.

"Hammond must come clean about whether he intends to increase taxes, slash spending, or increase borrowing to fund the blackhole created by the £1 billion DUP bribe and the £2 billion u-turn on his attempt to increase National Insurance Contributions for self-employed workers. The Chancellor could have settled this by including his plans in Tuesday's Finance Bill second reading, but instead he is still hiding the public finances under a shroud.

"We do not begrudge Northern Ireland getting the spending that it needs, but people all across the UK are crying out for the investment, jobs, and decent pay which will only be delivered by the next Labour Government."

Kate Osamor comment on the announcement that Emmanuel Macron will visit St Martin on Tuesday

Kate

Osamor MP, Labour's Shadow Secretary of State for International Development, commenting on the announcement that Emmanuel Macron will visit St Martin on Tuesday, said,

“Hurricane

Irma is the worst Atlantic storm to have hit in years, and people’s lives have been devastated in Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands and across the Caribbean.

“Boris

Johnson was clear on Sunday that this is a national disaster being treated as though in Inverness, Dover or St. Ives. Donald Trump is headed to Florida, and now Emmanuel Macron will visit St Martin tomorrow.

“But

with the UK response to Irma drawing wide criticism, Theresa May is still to announce whether she or Boris Johnson will visit those most affected, look them in the eye and put their concerns at the centre of her government’s response plan.

“The British people in the Overseas Territories deserve to see first-hand that the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary are doing everything they can to get a grip on this national disaster.”

The Treasury’s admission is a clear indication that the Conservatives’ chaotic attempts to circumvent Parliament must come to an end – Dowd

Peter Dowd MP, Labour’s Shadow

Chief Secretary to the Treasury,

commenting on reports that the Government has been forced to accept the need for a parliamentary vote on its £1 billion deal with the DUP, said:

“The Treasury’s admission of the need for a parliamentary vote on the £1 billion DUP bribe is a clear indication that the Conservatives’ chaotic attempts to circumvent Parliament must come to an end.

“Hammond must come clean about whether he intends to increase taxes, slash spending, or increase borrowing

to fund the blackhole created by the £1 billion DUP bribe and the £2 billion u-turn on his attempt to increase National Insurance Contributions for self-employed workers. The Chancellor could have settled this by including his plans in Tuesday's Finance Bill second reading, but instead he is still hiding
the public finances under a shroud.

"We do not begrudge Northern Ireland getting the spending that it needs, but people all across the UK are crying out for the investment, jobs, and decent pay which will only be delivered by the next Labour Government."

Yet another stark example of failure in the Government's management of its academies programme – Angela Rayner

Angela

Rayner MP, Labour's Shadow Secretary of State for Education, commenting on news that Wakefield City Academies Trust has pulled out of running 21 schools a few days into the new school term, said:

"This situation will create enormous uncertainty for pupils and teachers at these schools, who have no idea how their schools will be run in future. Ministers need to take immediate steps to reassure them that their education will not be put at risk.

"This
case is yet another stark example of failure in the Government's management of its academies programme and reflects on the system as a whole.

"A Labour
government would ensure schools are both properly funded and properly accountable."

Today's rise in trade deficit shows this country is falling far behind its potential under the Tories – Barry Gardiner

Barry

Gardiner MP, Labour's Shadow Secretary of State for International Trade, commenting on today's ONS figures, said:

"Today's

rise in the trade deficit shows yet again that after seven years of economic failure under the Tories, this country is falling far behind its potential.

"The rise in the deficit with non-EU countries is particularly concerning given the failure of this government to offer serious proposals for Britain's trading relationships with the rest of the world, post-Brexit. Tory fantasies about future trade deals are meaningless without delivering the investment and industrial strategy needed in this country for future export success.

"Only

Labour will deliver the investment and industrial strategy needed to create good, secure jobs and build an economy that works for the many, not the few."