

The Tory threat to living standards – Labour demands Tories drop plans to remove Winter Fuel Allowances from pensioners has today demanded that the Tories immediately abandon plans to remove the Winter Fuel Allowances from pensioners.

Labour

Speaking

at a press conference this morning, John McDonnell, Labour's Shadow Chancellor, said: "This is a savage attack on vulnerable pensioners, particularly those who are just about managing. We will not stand by and allow so many of them to be back in a situation where they have to choose whether they heat or eat."

This

comes as Labour today warns that the Tory manifesto represents a threat to living standards and increased insecurity for pensioners and working people.

Commenting

on the "extraordinary" lack of any mention of living standards in the Tories' manifesto, McDonnell said: "Living standards are falling under the Tories, yet Theresa May couldn't promise that she would seek to address this. There is a clear and unambiguous threat to living standards; an attack on pensioners and on working people."

Rebecca

Long-Bailey, Labour's Shadow Business Secretary, outlined the threat the Tories pose to pensioners, including:

The

Tories' new 'Double Lock', which would have left pensioners at least £330 worse off had it been in place in recent years.

How

five in every six pensioners are set to lose Winter Fuel payments, worth up to £300.

That
34 million people face the prospect of working longer if Theresa May raises
the State Pension age.

And
it is a similar tale for working people:

Since 2010, the average household is paying more in both direct and indirect taxation: nearly £2,000, with the threat of further tax rises

Under
the Tories the UK is set to experience the worst decade for real household disposable incomes since 1949.

Alongside the press conference, Labour has published a new document titled: 'The Tory Threat To Living Standards'. This analysis reveals the scope of the Tory attack on living standards, setting out how working people and pensioners will pay
the price of the Tories' betrayal.

John
McDonnell, Labour's Shadow Chancellor, speaking at a press conference outlining the Tory threat to working people, said:

On
the Tory manifesto:

"This was a manifesto that offers working people and pensioners' insecurity with a huge question mark over their living standards.

"Gone was the commitment to raise working people's living standards. Gone was the commitment not to raise taxes on working people. And gone was the commitment to protect pensioners' incomes through the triple lock.

"This
signals a clear threat to working people and to pensioners. So that's the choice at this election; a threat to working people's and pensioners' living standards if the Tories are re-elected on the 8th of June, or a Labour plan
to support working people. A Labour plan that will introduce a Real Living Wage of £10 an hour by 2020. A Labour plan that will commit to no income tax, VAT or NICs rises for 95 per cent of tax payers. And a Labour plan that will invest in our vital public services.

“That’s the choice at this election. A clear threat to working people’s living standards or a Labour Party that will stand up for the many, and not the few.

On wages:

“We are currently witnessing the worst decade for pay in 200 years.

“Real wages are still lower today than they were when the Tories came to power in 2010.

“According to the OECD, the UK is the only advanced major economy where growth has returned since the crash but wages have fallen.

“And it is unlikely to stop there. Experts have warned that with the cost of living increasing, household incomes are set to be squeezed even further.”

On taxation:

“Under the Tories working families are paying more in tax and there are further tax rises in the pipeline.

“Since 2010, the average household is paying more in both direct and indirect taxation- a total of nearly £2,000.

“Labour is promising no increase in taxation on low and middle income earners. The Tories in contrast have form on tax rises.

“They have increased taxes on working people before and they will do it again.”

Rebecca Long-Bailey, Labour’s Shadow Business Secretary, said:

On pensioners:

“The Tories have launched an all-out attack on pensioner incomes, by abandoning the Triple Lock, cutting Winter Fuel Payments, raising the State Pension age, and breaking promises on social care and GP access.

“They’ve laid bare the threat they pose to pensioners’ security and living standards. They have shown beyond doubt they’re turning their backs on older people and to future generations of pensioners.

“Theresa May’s message to millions of workers is now this: work for years longer only to receive far less generous support in old age.
