

5 ways Scotland is leading the way on health and social care

Scotland's health service turns 70 this year. We're proud of our NHS, and all that it has achieved. Of course, none of its many successes would be possible without the hardworking doctors, nurses and other staff that work in it.

Go to Source

Author:

It's time the Tories put jobs and living standards first in Brexit talks

Five years ago former Prime Minister David Cameron delivered one of the most significant and fateful political speeches in the UK's recent history.

Go to Source

Author:

Theresa May should sack Tory MP Ben Bradley over his shameful blog posts

Ben Bradley, the newly appointed Tory vice-chairman, found himself in a spot of bother this past week as a series of right-wing blog posts he had written before becoming a MP resurfaced.

Go to Source

Author:

The glass ceiling has still not been shattered, merely fractured

2018 celebrates 100 years since women won the hard-fought right to vote. The movement, started by those brave suffragettes, has seen women rising to the top of their fields in politics, business, sport and media. But their efforts are demeaned and disrespected by the pervasive inability to pay women the same as their male colleagues.

Go to Source

Author:

The time of silence on harassment is over – enough is enough

Sexual Harassment has never been more in the spotlight. But it is up to us to ensure that we keep it there, never again to be consigned to the shadows for fear of the consequences of speaking out.

Go to Source

Author: