

Putting new devolved powers to good use

The more decisions about Scotland that are being taken in Scotland – and the fewer taken by the Tories in Westminster – the better.

Your SNP government: getting on with the job

This week the SNP in government has been getting on with the job: investing in communities, protecting the most vulnerable in society, and delivering the best public services anywhere in the UK.

Here's how.

Nicola Sturgeon's Section 30 letter to Theresa May

Dear Theresa

When we met in Glasgow on Monday, I wished you well for the negotiations that lie ahead now that you have formally invoked Article 50 of the Lisbon Treaty. I want to reiterate those good wishes now.

Most Scots agree Scotland's Referendum should be made in Scotland

Most Scots think Holyrood, not Westminster, should have the right to decide whether to hold a second independence referendum, according to a new poll.

Your SNP team for the 2017 council elections

This May people across Scotland will go to the polls to elect their local council.