

'Unexpected' number of resistance genes found on pig farm

Researchers at Scotland's Rural College have identified a high number of antimicrobial resistance genes in pig faeces at a commercial farm, following the first longitudinal study of its kind.